Featuring works by Serafine Lilien, Elephant Clay Herd is a fundraiser created to honor elephants' matriarchal family structures and to raise awareness about their precarious future. 20% percent of fundraiser's proceeds will go to Sheldrick Wildlife Trust and Reteti Elephant Sanctuary.

Serafine Lilien created a herd of off-white, tusk-colored ceramic sculptures that deliberately lack tusks as a symbol of what's being taken from them—both literally (by poaching for ivory) and figuratively (by habitat loss and exploitation).

Elephants face steep declines: roughly 415,000 wild African elephants and 40,000–50,000 wild Asian elephants remain, and both species confront poaching, habitat loss, and climate-related pressures. Some elephants are now born without tusks, an alarming biological change whose causes are still being studied; meanwhile, demand for ivory continues to drive violence and hardship in communities where people have few alternatives to poaching. Elephant tusks are their molar teeth.
